

Contents

Contributors

Introduction

Olivier Glain

Memoirs of Early Australian English: demographic and social input in primary urban cradles and some consequences on the formation of Australian pronunciation

Anne Przewozny-Desriaux

Introduction

1. Overview of the contemporary Australian demographic and linguistic situation
2. Reconstructing the Australian linguistic community from a historical perspective
3. Australian English as a historical process
4. The birth of a typology and the state of the ternary sociophonetic spectrum in Modern and Contemporary AusE
5. Social interactions in relation to an Early Australian sociophonetic spectrum

Conclusion

References

Fragmented monoliths – Towards a more complex view of the intonation systems of the southern and northern urban dialects of the British Isles

Stephan Wilhelm

1. Background

- 1.1. The Celtic hypothesis
- 1.2. A Norse substratum?
- 1.3. A Celtic substratum?

2. Corpus and methodology

3. Results and analysis

- 3.1. Distributional differences
- 3.2. Realisational differences
- 3.3. Systemic differences

4. What about “RPI”?

Conclusion

References

Webliography

A Tale of One City: Phonological variation and change over 100+ years of Glasgow English

Jane Stuart-Smith

Introduction

1. Context: The City of Glasgow

- 1.1. History in a nutshell
- 1.2. Internal factors – housing in Glasgow
- 1.3. External factors – the World Wars and the broadcast media

2. Context: Language in Glasgow

- 2.1. The Scottish English sociolinguistic continuum
- 2.2. Sound change in Glasgow: The view from the end of the 20th century

3. Method: The Sounds of the City project

4. A changing city and sound changes from the 1890s-2000s

- 4.1. BOOT lowering
- 4.2. SVLR-weakening
- 4.3. R-weakening (again)
- 4.4. A changing city and sound changes from the 1890s-2000s

5. A changing city, new methods, and two more sound changes from the 1890s-2000s

- 5.1. L-darkening and R-weakening (again!) – a dynamic perspective
- 5.2. Changes in the stop voicing contrast (e.g. pin vs bin) – from semi-automated methods

6. Putting it all together: A changing city and sound changes over the 20th century

7. Implications for understanding the connections between context and sound change

References

‘We’re not Mackems’: identity issues in Houghton-le-Spring

Inès Brulard

Introduction

- 1. Houghton-le-Spring in the North East
- 2. Geordie vs Mackem
- 3. Being a Houghtonian vs being a Mackem

References

English, Bengali, and Noise in Kolkata: Contacts and Interferences

Marine Bellégo

Introduction

- 1. Cities and linguistics
- 2. Multilingualism in India and Kolkata

3. English words in spoken Bengali

4. Voices and noises

Conclusion

References

Lexical Influences of Hip Hop on White Urban Youth: Cultural appropriation, covert prestige and language crossing

Leland Tracy

Introduction

1. Opportunity and the Proximity of Social and Cultural Diversity in Urban Environments

2. Hip Hop: A Complex Social and Cultural Phenomenon

3. Hip Hop as Social Commentary

4. The Sociolinguistics of Hip Hop

5. Hip Hop and White Youth

6. Theoretical perspectives

6.1. Cultural appropriation

6.2. Covert Prestige

6.3. Language Crossing

Conclusion

References

Standard English, Urban Norms and Urban Myths: the Linguistic Imaginary at work

Olivier Glain

1. The Linguistic Imaginary (LI) and standardisation

2. The Middle English period (c. 1150-1500)

3. The end of the Middle English period and the written word

4. Early Modern English/the Renaissance (c. 1500-1650/1700)

5. The Modern English period (c. 1650-1900)

6. The development of a standard pronunciation

7. New spoken standards?

Conclusion

References

Enregistering the Steel City: language, image and identity in Sheffield

Joan Beal

Introduction

1. Sheffield and steel: a brief history

2. The 'Steel City'

3. Dialect levelling and Enregisterment: a Paradox?

3.1. The ‘death of dialects’

3.2. Enregisterment

4. The enregisterment of ‘Sheffieldish’

Conclusion

References

Le Corbusier’s New York: a geometric or sensory city?

Rémi Dignonnet

Introduction

1. New York, a Geometric City

1.1. Purism

1.2. A New Spirit for a New City

1.3. An International Style for an International City

2. New York, a Sensory City

2.1. The Visual Component

2.2. The Auditory Component

2.3. The Tactile Component

2.4. The Olfactory and Gustatory Components

Conclusion

References

Sounds of the Cities. A short introduction to urban soundscapes

Simon Cacheux

Introduction

1. Soundscapes

2. Listening

3. Listening again

4. Soundmarks

5. Acoustics of the cities

Conclusion

References

You, yeh, yis, youse: a morphophonological and stylistic approach to the representation of the Dublin dialect in The Snapper (1990), by Roddy Doyle

Léa Boichard

Introduction

1. The second-person personal pronoun in Irish and Dublin English, a diachronic and a synchronic approach

- 1.1. A history of YOU in English
- 1.2. YOU in Irish English: history and present-day usage

2. The second person personal pronoun in The Snapper: a case study

- 2.1 Yeh (635 occurrences)
- 2.2. You (475 occurrences)
- 2.3. Yis (65 occurrences)
- 2.4. Youse (3 occurrences)
- 2.5. Overview of YOU in The Snapper

3. From linguistic accuracy to Doylian discourse

- 3.1. A quest for linguistic accuracy?
- 3.2. Dialect and Doylian discourse

Conclusion

References

Towards an urban Scottish vernacular spelling? James Kelman, Tom Leonard and Irvine Welsh

Mathilde Pinson

Introduction

1. Linguistic and literary context

- 1.1. Scots and Scottish urban vernaculars
- 1.2. Leonard, Kelman and Welsh

2. In the beginning was the sound

- 2.1. Features transcribed
- 2.2. Features not transcribed
- 2.3. Comparative analysis of a selection of spellings

3. Consistency?

- 3.1. Type versus token inconsistency
- 3.2. Variability of the spelling of the possessive determiner in Skagboys: <my>; <ma>; <muh>

4. Towards a consensus?

Conclusion

References

“The roar was still in the air, the bucking rumble of the fall”: The Resounding Narrative of Catastrophe in post-9/11 Literature

Aliette Ventéjoux

Introduction

- 1. The noises of 9/11
- 2. A cry for help answered by silence
- 3. Rethinking relationships between neighbors
- 4. Coping through language and reclaiming the urban space and soundscape

Conclusion: counter-narratives, writing against the official discourse

References

“In New York and Not of It”: Scott and Zelda Fitzgerald’s “Metropolitan Venture” (“My Lost City” 24, 25)

Élisabeth Bouzonviller

- 1. “In New York and Not of It”: A Provincial Discovery
- 2. The City as a Text
- 3. New York as a Modernist Tool

References

Imprint